Aerotek is a leading employment agency for a reason – our ability to match your skills with a job opportunity that is right for you. With Aerotek locations across the U.S. and around the world, we can locate the right job in the area you want to be or where you currently live.

As a full service employment agency, we offer flexible employment options across a variety of skill sets, including contract, contract-to-hire and permanent opportunities. A contract position has a specific end date, while a contract-to-hire position has the potential to become permanent after the contract period is complete.

An employment agency offers applicants a unique experience versus a traditional job search. Choosing to begin your job search with a staffing company gives you immediate access to positions at leading companies that partner with Aerotek. You get the opportunity to work with a professional recruiter to identify your strengths, skills and how to apply your prior work experience. In addition, your recruiter will share important details about a position and provide interview tips so that you can demonstrate your skills and expertise. By working with an employment agency, you can also build your network of connections and increase the number and variety of jobs you qualify for through Aerotek. Our service is completely free and you receive the added benefit of working with a recruiter that specializes in your industry. Our recruiters will identify available positions that fit your skills, personality and career goals and guide you through the hiring process,

Health - Addiction Recovery

One of the goals of our approach to treatment is to help clients develop a deeper understanding of themselves and their dependency on alcohol and drugs.

This heightened self-awareness helps people make the profound and often difficult changes necessary for a successful recovery.

We also work closely with families to help them learn how to support the recovery of their loved ones.

Health - Addiction Recovery

The pressures and realities of adult life often trigger substance use disorders. Whether to relieve anxiety or depression brought on or exacerbated by work, school, domestic life, finances, marital issues, social problems or other life circumstances, the self-medicating powers of alcohol and drugs are undeniably effective, until a problem develops. As they progress, substance use disorders not only make the problems being self-medicated worse, they begin to impact other areas of life, health and functionality.

Our clients represent persons of all ages, races, genders and walks of life. While the reasons and circumstances that lead them to us are invariably different, they share a common desire to get their lives back on track, and need practical, effective strategies to accomplish that.

The course and type of services we may recommend are tailored to the unique needs of our clients, as determined from a comprehensive evaluation and modified as needed on an ongoing basis.

Treatment and recovery support services are provided by a multi-disciplinary team of clinicians in the areas of counselling, psychiatry and nursing, who specialize in mental health and chemical dependence. Each of our clients is matched with a primary therapist beginning with the evaluation, who serve as their main guide throughout care. Our intake staff makes every effort to link clients with a primary therapist best suited to their needs. We do everything we can to help our clients prepare for life after treatment, and the challenges of long-term recovery. This requires addressing not only the fundamental causes of the problem, but also the addictive patterns and behaviors that are developed and honed over time. We help our clients explore the behavioral and learned aspects of their problem, and help them develop strategies to avoid their old rituals, routines and triggers.

house. Call or walk-in, appointments preferred. Accepts referrals, court mandates, and referrals from probation/parole. Services are provided to assist individuals who are being/have been released from prison with their return to mainstream society. Assistance includes group counseling, job referrals, enrollment in an educational program, applying for food stamps and Medicaid, and supportive living housing. Also provides court advocacy for individuals who are mandated by the court to attend one of BTB's programs, as well as those individuals who voluntarily enroll in the BTB program and/or are also involved in the court (have been charged with a crime). Collaborates with many agencies to provide referrals and linkages to services that are mandated by parole and/or the court.

This program can start while you are still in incarceration and continues through release and while on parole.

Check with your facility parole officer to see if you qualify while still incarcerated or your field parole officer to see if you can enroll in the program after you have been released. The Reentry Program works with you to create an Transitional Accountability Plan, which identifies your personal goals and needs. You will work with a Care Coordinator who will assist you with meeting the conditions of parole and the goals of the TAP by scheduling appointments with providers and identifying ways to overcome difficulties in areas of transportation, employment, family and more. Studies by such places as Stanford University have found that the first 72 hours are a critical and crucial time when you have the potential to seize the moment and lay good foundations for a new start.

You need to be connected with housing, counseling, employment, medical and other resources as quickly as possible. This is at a time when there may also be temptations and the potential to become overwhelmed or confused by the many choices available.
