Chapter 11

Places to find help

"It's important to not have high expectations (of any one place), but you can get help from a multitude of places. There's help out there, but it takes a lot of footwork and planning and pro-activeness."
(person on parole)

This chapter lists places where you can find different kinds of help. Many people on parole have told us that asking for help is something they find very hard to do. Please don't be afraid to ask for any help you need to transition out of prison and back into a community.

Since it's impossible to list every resource in Colorado, we've tried to include some of the more well-known places that have been around a while. We list them in alphabetical order by name along with symbols to help you identify the type(s) of help they offer.

The first part of the chapter lists places where you might find help in the Denver metro area. This includes Denver, Arapahoe, Adams, Douglas, Jefferson, and Broomfield counties. The last part of the chapter lists places where you might find help in the rest of Colorado. Communities are listed in alphabetical order.

You may need to do a little research on your own to find help. There are a couple of different ways to do this.

- Ask your parole officer and/or a community re-entry specialist if s/he knows of specific places to get help. (See chapter 5 for information about the DOC community re-entry program.)
- If you're on parole and assigned to TASC, let them know the type of services you need. TASC case managers know about resources in their community. The TASC offices are described and listed in chapter 5.
- Call 211, a database of resources available throughout most of Colorado (see below for more info.) All you need to do is dial 211 on a phone, including cell phones, and an operator will come on the line.
- Check out other databases/resource lists found in this chapter. They are identified by the RL symbol.
- If you find a place in your community where you can get help, ask if they know about other places in the community where you might find help.
- A county department of human services office closest to where you live is also a good place to find out about resources in your town or area. To find the office closest to you, go to the website for Colorado Department of Human Services at www.cdhs.state.co.us. Click on Find a Service By County.
- Your county Workforce Center is also a good place to check. Besides employment information, they may also know about other resources in the area. Chapter 15 has a list of every Workforce Center in the state.
- If you have a disability and need training to return to work, check with the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation (DVR) office in your area to see if you're eligible for their services. Information about the DVR, including addresses and phone numbers, is in chapter 15.

TIP: If you need help, it can be very helpful to work with a case manager. These people can help you find other resources and help you figure out who does what in the community. When you ask for help from a community organization, ask if case management services are available.

Many organizations listed in this chapter offer a variety of services. For example, an organization that is identified by the symbol as re-entry may also offer types of help that aren't identified by a symbol. Be sure to ask. Most organizations ask that you call first to ask about orientation sessions or to make an appointment.

Denver metro area

2-1-1

RL

Mile High United Way sponsors one of the most comprehensive databases of resources in Colorado. You can reach an operator by dialing 2-1-1, 7 days a week, 24 hours a day. (Hours may vary around the state.) If you are not able to reach an operator by dialing 2-1-1, you can dial 1.866.760.6489. The database for resources in the Denver metro area can also be found online at www.unitedwaydenver.org. The database of resources in the rest of the state is at www.211colorado.org. Click on your county on the map. Then look for key words such as Get Help or Services and click on these.

- Most cell phones can dial 2-1-1.
- Most 2-1-1 call centers have Spanish speaking operators. Other languages are available through translation services.
- Be prepared to tell the operator your county, zip code, and the type of service you need.

3-1-1

RL

If you need information about a city agency or service in Denver, dial 3-1-1. The city's call center has operators from 6 am to 11 pm, seven days a week. Note: 3-1-1 does not collect resource lists like 2-1-1 does, but if you need a phone number or address, or if you just have a question about an agency, you can get this information by dialing 3-1-1.

www.urbanpeak.org

Urban Peak Colorado Springs

423 E Cucharras St., Colorado Springs CO 80903
719.630.3223

Urban Peak provides a continuum of services for homeless and runaway youth between the ages of 14 and 24 years of age in Denver and between the ages of 15 to 21 in Colorado Springs. The nonprofit provides a safe and caring place to help younger people get off the streets. If you are older or younger than the ages indicated, they can still help find a shelter or similar organization that helps people in any age group.

TIP: One person who helps with re-entry recommended that you make a list of the resources and services you need, such as help finding a house for someone with a record, food bank, clothing for job interviews, glasses, parenting class, etc. Bring this list with you whenever you visit an agency and use it to find out what the agency can and cannot help you with. She said that sometimes if you don't ask for a particular type of help, an agency may not think to mention it to you.

Resources for the rest of the state

If you parole or discharge outside of the Denver Metro area, you may have to check around a bit to find the resources in your community. Please note that many organizations and agencies may not have the time and money to return letters and accept phone calls. However, after you're released, feel free to check in with every resource listed in this book. Everyone has given permission to be included in this book.

Here are a few other places where you might find information about resources in the community that you return to:

- United Way's 2-1-1 call center and website can connect you with services throughout the state.
- Your parole officer or a DOC community re-entry specialist may know about resources where you live.
- If you're on parole and assigned to TASC, let them know the type of services you need. TASC case managers know about resources in their community. The TASC offices are described and listed in chapter 5.
- A county department of human services office closest to where you live is also a good place to find out about resources available in your town or area. To find the office closest to you, go to the website for Colorado Department of Human Services at www.cdhs.state.co.us. Click on Find a Service By County.
- Your county Workforce Center is also a good place to check. Besides employment information, they may also know about other resources in the area. Chapter 15 has a list of every Workforce Center in the state.
- If you have a disability and need training to return to work, check with the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation (DVR) office in your area to see if you're eligible for their services. Information about the DVR, including addresses and phone numbers, is in chapter 15.

TIP: If you need a computer in order to look up information about resources, try the public library in your community. Many libraries have computers you can use for free as well as classes where you can learn computer skills.
